

Business Spotlight: Moms Making Six Figures

The reality of raising a family in the Bay Area (or anywhere in California, for that matter) is that it truly does require two incomes. Tamie Scranton knew that she needed an income, but she also wanted to be a mom who was present and available for her three children.

After the downturn in the economy, she was no longer able to count on her income from the mortgage business. She knew she needed to find an alternative means of creating additional income, but she wondered whether that could be possible while maintaining control over her time.

Scranton was introduced to Moms Making Six Figures in 2011 by her cousin, Angie Ganga. Ganga shared that she had found a way to create a six figure income and be at home for her three boys. Scranton quickly saw the potential of MM6F. She saw that she really could have both. "I am the mother of three amazing teenagers! I know that may surprise you...not that I have teenagers, but that I would describe them as amazing! Here's the thing...I want them to stay that way," Scranton said.

Scranton and Ganga weren't alone. Heidi Bartolotta founded Moms Making Six Figures in December 2009 with that very goal in mind; having time for her children without sacrificing the ability to generate significant income.

Previously, Bartolotta had worked as a pharmaceutical sales representative, but after having her two daughters, she no longer wanted to work late and travel; she wanted to be home. Bartolotta said her team is comprised of women from very different education levels, backgrounds and work-styles.

Scranton says: "Honestly, finding MM6F has been such a blessing. My husband's cancer is very demanding and our children are very athletic, so it was important that I be able to adjust my schedule around their activities. And being able to support them and let them follow their passions has paid off! We have two children

WRINKLES: Laughter, not crying, is the right choice in play

From B1

for "New Wrinkles."

Award-winning SF composer-lyricist-writer Morris Bobrow collaborated with Nachman and Abrams to create 31 hilarious yet sometimes angst-filled reflections on aging. Abrams said, "as we age, we try desperately to hang on to our youth. You can either laugh or cry...I choose laughter."

Abrams adds "We customize each show to the local audience. In this show, the audience will recognize lots of references to Marin places and names." Oh-oh.

Topics include the pains, perils, and poignancy of high school reunions, hair loss, technology, and more.

Have you moved on from hip-hop music to hip replacement? Do you struggle to program your TV? Do you long to drink from the fountain of youth when you swallow your pills? Is your mailbox stuffed with ads for long-term-care insurance or cemetery plots?

If so, grab your walker, change the batteries in your hearing aids, and shuffle in to laugh at such skits and songs as "HMO," "AARP," "Ma'am," and "Will We HaveEnough?" This is your show; no need to bring the kids. They wouldn't understand, and they'll probably laugh at you anyway.

The (mostly) middle-aged stars include local comic actors Mark Clark, Paula Gianetti, Kit Grimm, Nan Ayers, and Erika Alstrom, with direction by Morris Bobrow. "We get to sing in this show" notes

Clark, "and that's pretty funny on its own."
